

Contribution ID: 89

Type: not specified

ISA: COVID and the Future of International Studies

Tuesday, 14 June 2022 16:45 (1h 30m)

COVID has transformed so many things and academic exchange and collaboration is not exempt from those impacts. Conferences have been cancelled, postponed, pivoted to hybrid and the pandemic has created financial uncertainties for many people and institutions in the field. It has also created pressures for new and different types of interaction that many associations have been ill-equipped to manage in the short-term, all the while many colleagues crave the return to in-person gatherings. This roundtable is populated by representatives from various international studies organizations who will speak to their experiences to date and looking ahead. It will also spur speculation about future trends in our field.

Abstract time zone

Membership

Track Classification: Conference/Management