

Contribution ID: 1582

Type: not specified

The continuum of gendered violence – everydayness, trauma and insecurity

Friday, 7 June 2024 15:00 (1h 30m)

Feminist scholars point to the significance of studying conflict as a continuum of violence, noting that it is rarely confined in terms of time and space. This points to the significance of studying violence and conflict in unorthodox spaces and seeking to break the public-private divide. This involves taking account of individual stories of violence and of activism. This panel brings together a conversation that centres individual stories of violence and resistance across different sites of existence.

Track Classification: Gendering International Relations Working Group