

Contribution ID: 1871 Contribution code: FR05

Type: Panel

Shaping Security: Public Opinion, Media Narratives, and Security Policy

Friday 5 June 2026 13:15 (1h 30m)

This panel investigates how public opinion, media narratives, and everyday understandings of (in)security interact to shape the formulation, legitimisation, and contestation of security policy. The papers discuss how security is communicated, interpreted, and experienced through vernacular and everyday articulations of security and how the circulation of disinformation and media narratives influence public perceptions of security. The panel examines the co-constitution of security and communication, highlighting how media and public discourse operate as key sites where meanings of security are produced, normalised, and contested.

Track Classification: Security Policy and Practice