Bridging academia and policy in a changing world

Friday 5 June 2026 09:00 (1h 30m)

There is a little doubt that the global order, as we know it, is changed rapidly and profoundly. Many long-standing pillars of international politics such as international law, multilateral organizations and peace-making, are being questioned and redefined. How can we sense of this changing world together?

This roundtable brings together editors, scholars, policymakers and communications professionals to discuss how links between academic research and policy-making can be fostered in a sustainable way. What does it mean to write and publish effectively for policy audiences? How can academics promote their research to diverse audiences beyond academia? What spaces and opportunities exist for community-building and knowledge exchange between academia and policy-makers? These are some of the many topics we will discuss.
